INTRODUCTION.

THOUGH this collection of ancient coins deserves a better fate than to be broken up, there is still much to reconcile us to its destiny, in the consideration that its materials will greatly promote the growth of other collections, and thereby advance the interests of numismatic science amongst us.

It is by studying such a collection as this that the importance of this kind of learning is understood; for it is almost alone in such a field that any satisfactory information concerning the religion, the civilization, and social life of ancient races can be acquired.

Count Scipio Maffei, of Verona, during the early part of the last century, in "A Comparison of the Use of Inscriptions and Medals," calls these two sorts of monuments "the eyes of learning;" certain it is that it is through these eyes we must look if we would see the buried nations as they appeared when acting their proper parts on the stage of life.

Vanity or prejudice may have influenced the historian, and given a false coloring to his pages, but the record that we find inscribed upon a coin may be safely taken for a fact. In this I do not include symbolical representations, which are almost as common among the moderns as the ancients. We miss the majestic form of Jupiter Aetophorus on modern coins, but the Olympian bird, holding the thunder in his talons, has been retained. Not in Jupiter, but "in God we trust." Some of the cumbrous machinery of paganism has been abolished, but the goddess of Liberty still holds her place; and Fame sounds her trumpet, and Victory the conquering days of Alexander and the great men and women of antiquity. The value of coins is in the pictures which they give of the number of facts which they contain.

How the great men and women of antiquity looked; and, if we would see true and undoubted representations of their altars and temples, their bridges and ships, their galleys whither upon tier of oars, their gladiators and the vast amphitheatres in which they fought, the courses on which their chariot races were won, with the frightened horses dashing madly past the image of Taxaxippus—in short, if we would see illustrations of public and private life, as it existed in the distant past, we can look for them nowhere but on coins.

In making up this catalogue, I have occasionally introduced such notes as occurred to me at the time of writing, believing that I would be thanked by some, and pardoned by the rest, of my readers for so doing. And I hope that its reception will be such as to encourage others, with more leisure and greater ability, to indulge in similar but more extensive illustrations.

It remains for me only to add to what I have advanced concerning the study of ancient coins, a few words of hearty and richly-merited commendation of this particular collection.

It has been formed with enthusiasm, as well as with learning and judgment, and I am sensible that it would be difficult to speak the full truth in its favor, and at the same time preserve the appearance of candor and moderation.

It will perhaps be sufficient for me to say that a large proportion of the coins are exceptionally fine, and that many of them are so rare, that, in despair of originals, we have heretofore been satisfied to possess British Museum copies.

Purchasers at this sale may rest assured of the genuineness of their coins, and no reasonable pains have been spared to make the attribution and description accurate.

A few good modern coins and medals will be found at the close of the catalogue, and in the addenda.

Smith

[This and the following tetradrachms, to Nos. 16 and 17, were prior to the time of Phidias and Pericles. The Abbe Barthelmy says that the Griffon which appears on the casque of Minerva at a later period, was copied from the one on the celebrated statue of this goddess by Phidias. Nos. 16 and 17 are examples. So perfect is the preservation of these coins, that it is doubtful if the seven tetradrachms in this collection have lost as many grains in weight.]

443 mon, in beaded circle; rev. Pallas Nicephorus seated, her shield with the gorgon face supporting her left arm, in the field a spear, ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ ΛΥΣΙΜΑΧΟΥ. Extremely fine. Much more rare than last. Drachm.

NOTE.—Without doubt this coin bears the head of Agathocles, son of Lysimachus. It is one of the gems of the collection.

PARTHIA.

- 2.5 321 ARSACES. Uncertain date. Clothed bust with bearded filleted Barnes head in beaded circle; rev. in hollow, king seated to r.
holding bow, behind, dagger, *ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΝ

COINS OF ROMAN FAMILIES.

NOTE.—As many of the denarii in the following series have the fine and inimitable polish that time gives to perfect coins, whose surfaces have been protected from injurious contacts, the term brilliant will be used to distinguish such from those even ex- tremely fine. It has never before been my good fortune to catalogue, or even to see, so fine a collection.

- 15 362 ABURIA. Head of Rome, GEM; rev. Victory in Quadriga,
